RUSSIAN PROGRESS IN CENTRAL ASIA. Russia is not only pursuing her advances in Central Asia, but is consolidating the territory already gained. The Czar has just issued a decree constituting the ter territory already gamed. The Czar has just issued a decree constituting the territory lately conquered in Bokhara and along the line of the Juxartos river one military province. For Governor he has named General Kanfman, who in the Caucasus and elsewhere has displayed administrative and military ability of a high order. This step is important. Bokhara, with its strangely mongrel population of Afghans, Araba, Jews, Calmucks, Mongols, Tanjiks, and half a dozen other unprononneeable tribes, is not so barbarous res are open and the men at work just on other days. They need to maintain one in the old house, till as hast a little wearen-faced old gentleman, with a little wrinsle of an old woman on his arm, their combined ages being just one hundred and twenty-six, came up from the coach (previously announced by telegraph) and represented themselves as the wedding party. They said that the ceremony had taken place only that morning, that they were very weary already, begged the favor of a cup of green tea and immediate retirement, and hoped that the bridal apartment had been well aired and the sheath dred. The old lady simpered and blusbed and shook with all her looseness of lean wrists while she ate, and then the groom said that champagne was to be sent to the room. The bend played, as was the custom, while the two promeasled sum in arm between double files of grinning servants to the noptial coach. Directly a cry was heard and the bell rang violently. The old gentliman in a fury camplained that there were intruders in the chamber. This hotel has no bridal-chamber. They than in the word. SWISS COTTAGES,

One of which must have served as the model for the thousand and one miniatures in this shape which I see every day in the shop windows. It was of wood, three stories high, with steps on the outside leading to the second floor, a balcony extending entirely around the third floor, and a projecting roof which covered all. The ground floor is not generally inhabited, but serves as a store-room for all articles uccessary about a countryman's home, not excepting his little wagon in which he carries his produce to market. In some cases the ass which draws the wagon shares this same shelter, but here the proprietor, being one of the aristocrats of his class, had built a little stable for his beast. There was a good deal of carving and gingerbread work about the house, but it and all its surroundings had a very comfortable and homelike appearance. Speaking of "Where?" said the clerk.
"Up there, sir, in the ceiling."
This was proved to him to be his re ection in the plate-mirror.
In three minutes there was another ring and sounds as of somebody asphyxiated. Assistance was forthwith dispatched, and it was found that the bride, being spare and weakly, had failen so deep in the mattresses that she could not get herself cut. Remiuds me that there is a difference in this matter between the French and Amer-ican nomenclature, which sometimes causes mistakes quite amusing to all ex-cept the victim who finds that he has to climb two finds of taking constant

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 3 A. M.

We have received an extraordinary nication from Laurel county, which we present below. It would seem that the radicals are not disposed to await the action of Congress in enfranchising the negroes in this State. We reserve our omments upon this remarkable action antil we receive further particulars.

London, Ky., Aug. 6, 1367. To the Editors of the Louisville Journal: To the Editors of the Louisville Journal:
Sirs: The votes in Laurel county stand for Barnes 6-1, Helm 199, Kinkead 146.
The radicals were able to get this majority only by the grossest fraud. For fear of the defeat of the abolitionist candidate for Representative (McClary) they voted 100 or npwards of nigger votes. This was done in two districts at a distance from the Court-honse, where the radicals had things their own way and had the niggers vote their whole ticket. McClary certainly will not hold his seat.
Yours, truly,
JOHN BENTON

HORTICULTURAL EXRIBITION .- The Kenncky Horticultural Society will doubtless have a superb display at the Masonic Temple from 10 to 11 o'clock this mornng. Peaches, pears, plams, grapes, necarines, and apples will be in their perfee ection during this and the next month; and the most perfect specimens of every ariety of these several kinds of fruit will be exhibited at the weekly displays of the ocie'y. The present season is an unsual one, and it will be ever memorable not so much for the abundance of the crop as for the magnificent size and beauty o all kinds of fruits. The choicest specinens, picked and culled by frnit growers or their perfection in form and color, are such agare exhibited on the Horticultural ociety's tables, and no one should negect the opportunity of examining these real y wonderful products of horticultural skill, aided and developed nuder the favorable influences of the genial season with which Divine Providence has blessed

WANTED PAY .- A green Hibernian, who has lately been naturalized, went to the head upon the Iap of Winnie Woodson, First-street Station-honse on the day of upon whose face charcoal would mark the late election for the purpose of exercising for the first time in his life the high right of a freeman, the elective franhise. After having voted for one of the candidates, he declined voting for any others, and lingered for a considerable time at the clerk's deak. He was asked why he did so, and replied that he was waiting for his pay; whereupon the clerk nformed him that men are not paid for oting in this country, that it is a noble ight which every citizen claims, and one which every patriot guards with jealousy. 'Och," said Paddy, "Bejasus the gentle man tould me I'd be afther bein paid, an

FINDING THE SUNSET.

A BEAUTIFUL ALLEGORY

BY MRS. ABBY S M FABLAND.

A little girl, whose head hardly came up to the feathery tops of the tall grass in which she had been playing all day, stood in a beautiful green field looking toward the snuset. Her brown hair fell around her forehead and face in curling rings, and her tiny hand, with its rosy tipped fingers, looked like a pink white shell, as she curved them over soft, wistful dark eyes, to shade it from the glare. The sun was going down in its slow, majestic way—there was no hurry so far about his manner of leaving the earth in darkness—behind a row of purple hills which hounded the horizon. The light lay across their tops of level bars in crimson and gold, but at the foot the shadows just becaunt to creep upward. The child, whose eyes were only on the top of the hills, did not notice these. She had formed a resolution as she stood there. It was to find out where the sun really set. She looked back at the house where she lived. Her mother was nowhere to be seen.

"I shall certainly be back before it is dark," she said aloud. "On my way back I will pick my mamma a bounnet. When he sees me coming back with my hands full of beantiful flowers, even if it is rather late, she will forget to scold me."

Saying this, she went skipping along with all her might, to find the place where the sun sets.

with all her might, to find the place where the sun acts.

It was a lovely path she went through.

Now it wound through the level meadow, It was a lovely path she went through. Now it wound through the level meadow, soft and grassy to the foot; and now it ran through little patches of woodland where the fragrant pine needlea yielded to her light footsteps. Everywhere it was bordered with flowers. In the meadows, oceans of buttercups and daisies, and tall blue lilies, the wild fleur-de-lia in the woodpaths blue and white violeta, and ber journey was quite over the fragrant spring orclis. But the path always led back to the open field with the clear sky overhead. All thushed and golden with the sunset glory. Sometimes she crossed a strip of yellow sandtand catching up a handful, watched it stream swiftly through her clasped fingers until only a few grains remained in her grasp.

As she ran along she saw a shadow heide her in the path. It was another lit

"No," said the new-comer. "I was merely waiting for you. Will you stop and play with me, please? I know where the wild honeysuckles grow in the woods youder."

yonder.

Rose took hold of her hand and they ran through a little woodpath where there was a crooked brook, which ran gurgling and singing over its rocky bed. On the sides of the path was the nodding red honey-suckle, shooting up its slender stems among scattered rocks.

"How lovely they are," said Rose.

"These I shall carry to my mother."

"Does she live out there," asked the other child, pointing to the sunset.

"Oh, no," said Rose: "but when I go

"Oh, no," said Rose: "but when 1 go back to her, I shall take these flowers. It is getting dark, isn't it? I really must go on. Good bye. Thank you for the honey suckles." And, hurrying on, she left her little friend in the lovely woodpath and came out again into the meadow. The snn still looked red and glorious.

"It is not too late," she said to herself. I begin to fear it may grow dark, and I nould miss the sunset after all." For a little time she harried along ather faster. Now the meadow began to cook broader and wider, and the woods and cool resting-places were less frequent. Still the sunset did not seem ment. Still the subset and mellow merch nearer.

The light was very soft and mellow everywhere, and the whole landscape seemed to wear a rosy haze. Rose looked radiantly lovely in this crimson light. She saw her face in a brook by the path, and could scarcely believe that it was her and conduscarcely believe that it was her own image she saw.

"Travelling improves one very much," she said, as she smoothed her curling brown hair with her little hands. "Certainly I am prettier than I was when I set out. And I look quite like a young lady."

Just at that moment she looked np. and saw a handsome youth drawing near her.

"He is very beautiful," said Rose to herself. "How proudly he walks, and what large blue eyes he has. Blue eyes are much lovelier than hrown ones, I think." And she looked regretfully at her own dark brown eyes reflected in the clear to herself.

The youth did not hear what she said, for she whispered it to her image in the water. But his eyes said very plainly that he thought she was pretty: that he had never seen any half as pretty as she looked, standing in the rose-colored lines.

"Let me go the way you are going will you not?" he said entreatingly. "I will carry your honey-sackles, for you, and that appar of sweet-brist." that spray of sweet-briar,"
"I fear the thorns of the sweet-briar will prick your hand," said Rose. "See how mine were scratched in gathering

"I do not fear it," he answered, taking the thorny spray in his hand. "And we will divide the flowers. See, I will carry half, and so shall you."
"Are you going to find out where the sun sets?" asked Rose, looking shyly up

"I am going where you go," he answer-. "But it is a long, long way from here, you know.

"Is it really?" said Rose, a little alarmed. "It does seem farther than at first, or I had no idea of the distance when I set out. I suppose I had better have staid with my mother. But yonto take care of me, I shall not be so much afraid, even it should growdark. And I presume she will have done looking for me by this time.

time.
So they went on together very happily. The youth, whose name was Victor, was very kind to Rose. He lifted her gently over all the little streams which they were obliged to cross, and if there was a rongh stick or a thorn-bush in the path he cut it away, and made the way clear auf smooth for her. In fact, she seemed to get on twice as fast as before. And the road seemed broader and more like a highway than at first. There was more sand, and the flowers were less frequent.

Pretty soon a very little child came Fretty soon a very little child came down the path, and clung to the folds of Rose s dress as she walked on. The infant was very lovely. It seemed as if she had glided down on a slanting ray of the snn. Rose sometimes carried him for a neument when his little feet seemed tred, and sometimes he clung to her hand or to Victor s, sometimes he danced along in the path before them, and then he would It they had passed on, that he might hear them call after him. He was a gay, mischievous little sprite; but they loved him. Suddenly, almost before Rose kuew foreheads. Rose cried out with rapture at the beauty of the scene.

"At last we are nearly at the ent," she said joyously. "And my feet are so tired. But not nearly so tired as they would have been but for yon, dear Victor. How much you have helped me, "Not more than you have helped me, said Victor. "Many a time I am quite sure I should have stumbled in the path, which you remenber was quite rough in some places, if you had not held me fast by the hand. You really trip very lightly and easily over the rough places. Oh you have helped me quite as much as I have yon, I assure you."

"Oh! what a disappointment!" cried Rose, stopping suddenly. "Here is certainly a stream to cross before we are at the end of our jonrney. And it looks deep and black."

and black. "It looks deep, hut not frightful," answered Victor. "See how tranquil the current is. It is narrow, too. We can both wim it."

Saying this, he plunged into the stream.
As he did so Rose caught a glimpse of herself in the water, and stooped to look at the image there. Strangest of all that had happened, she did not see her childish fame with clustering curls and crimson face, with clustering curls and crimson cheeks. The face which was her's, was cheeks. The face which was her's, was peaceful and sweet, but many wrinkles were set in the white skin. Her hair was white as silver, and the eyes were still dark, but they were sunken, and the sight was dim. Already Victor had nearly reached the sunset. She stretched her hands eagerly toward him and cried.

'Do not leave me, Victor. It is so lone-some here."

"You will come soon," he cried, waving his hand back to her. "The sun is not quite down, you know."
Rose looked at the sun, and saw he was nearly gone down. She closed her eyes for a moment in the blinding glory of his last rays. When she opened them again she was on the other side of the river, and her journey was quite over.

When this old hat was new, there was a gap in Comberland mountains, which is most likely there now. There lived right most likely there now. There lived right in the gap a blacksmith, who was an infidel, a man of education, wielding a powerful influence over the minds of men around him, was a potent enemy of christianity, and made it his particular business to whip every minister who attempted to pass through the gap.

At an annual Conference of the Methodist Church the amounted to this circuit.

At an annual contenence of the sciencial offst Church, the appointed to this circuit refused to accept of his work, another was appointed, and another, and they declined. At length the Bishop rose and asked if there was any minister in Conference who had moral courage and faith in Christ self-scient to enounter this month. Christ sufficient to eucounter this mon ster. A young man responded Ministers and presiding olders went to Ministers and presiding elders went to their various appointments.

The day arrived when young Bowden was to fill his first appointment, about two miles from the gap. The blacksmith, expecting rare sport, dismissed his striker, and seating himself by a tree at the roadside, was reading Tom Paine, when he heard a man approaching, singing in a voice that echoed among the craggs and clifts.

The smith inquired if he was that d—d cthodist preacher sent to this circuit. Bowden replied that he was a Methodist eacher, and that he was appointed to

"Yes," said he, "and I would pound the ground with your Christ if he were to offer to preach in this neighborhood.

"I make you this proposition," said the smith. I'ronise me three things:

"1st. Renounce this circuit."

"2d. Burn up your Bible.

"3d. That you will read Tom Paine, which I here offer you."

Bowden replied that "he could not comply with his demand."

"Then, said the smith, "dismount and try your hand at puglilistics.

Eowden replied that "the coat he wore was presented by some ladies, and, not wishing to soil or tear it, he hoped he would allow him to pull it off."

This request was granted. He first would allow him to pull it off."

This request was granted. He first drew out his right arm, and, as his right hand saw the light, he dealt the smith such a blow that it felled him heavily to the ground.

Bowden ponneed upon him with the ferocity of a tiger, inflicting blow after blow in rapid succession, the smith cried out has it. Vanouer.

"3d. Promise to read a Bible that I offer you every day."

"th. That you go and hear me preach today, and regularly hereafter.

A few more arguments dealt heavily into his ribs induced kin to accept numbers three and four, but he could not appear before his neighbors a whipped cur, with his face black and blue, and as for singing, the only music he had ever made was with a jewsharp, and his trip hammer.

The preacher pounded his ponitent gain until he agreed to try and follow aim in singing, if he would lead. When he singing was ended, a few more blows nduced him to go with him to church. Curiosity was rife to learn why the slacksmith should be at a meeting, as also for the altered condition of his countenties.

nce, I aithful to his promise the black-mith daily read his bible, regularly attended meeting, and early became a convert to christianity, and not until he joined the church was revealed an account of the first meeting with the preacher.

I inally the affair was spoken of, and at the next Conference the preacher was asked for the truth of the matter, and with tears in his eyes, he exclaimed: "My dear brethren, it appeared the only argument I could successfully use, and I did indeed pound the grace of God into him

Indeed, they had passed on, that he might hear them call after him. He was a gay, mischievous little sprite; but they loved him. Suddenly, almost before Rose kuew what kad happened, she missed him altogether. She atopped and called for him, but he was nowhere to be seen. She wanted to go back a few steps to see if she could find him.

"It is of no nse," sail Victor. "He is not behind us. He will reach the sunset before you do. I sam sure of it. Besides, if you wished, you could not go back." Not go back, 'said Rose sorrowfully. Not if I wished to go?"

No, 'answered Victor. "Look back and you will see."

Rose looked over her shoulder. There, where she had left the meadow to come upon the highway, a thick, dark mist had settled, so that he reyes could not penetrate it, except a little here and there it was pierced by the long rays of the decising sun. Rose sighed deeply. The seed of the long rays of the decising sun. Rose sighed deeply. The seed of the long rays of the decising sun. Rose sighed deeply. A proper one of convenient size would probably cost at least $100,000, with all the necessary attachments. But once established and properly managed and understood, I am satisfied the taste of the public in any large city would support one. The price of a Turkish bath in London is three stillings and sixnence, in New York it is shillings and sixpence, in New York it is one dollar and a haif.
